

Lecture 19: Overview and concluding comments

This is the last ordinary lecture, the lecture next Monday is a questions session, and how much time we will use depends on how many questions you may have.

We use this last ordinary lecture for a brief overview of what we have done in the semester, mentioning what is more or less important with a view to the upcoming exam.

The curriculum consists of the two books that we have used (in Beaud and Dostaler we read only chapters 1-8), with the exceptions stated in the handouts. Since we have an open-book exam, it is not necessary to memorize some or all pages of the textbook. However, it may be useful to be reasonably well-oriented in the textbooks, three hours are not so much after all.
